* In calculating the margin of error (MOE) for the survey, we provide two calculations, one that compensates for the relative standard deviation of the weights and one that does not. Without taking the variance of the weights into account, the margin of error for the full sample is 2.83%. To compensate for the additional uncertainty from weighting, we apply a multiplier derived from the coefficient of variation of the weights: $\sqrt{1+CV^2}$, where $CV=sd(weights)/mean(weights)$. For this weight sensitive calculation, the MOE for the full sample is 3.28%.

[Prior to the beginning of early voting, respondents were not given the option to state that they had “already voted” in either the Democratic or Republican Primary.]

[For Q15 and Q16, respondents who had not yet voted were asked the questions as presented. If a respondent indicated that they hadn't thought about it enough to have an opinion, they received a follow-up questions: "If you had to make a choice, who would you choose?" For those who indicated that they had already voted in the Democratic or Republican Primary, the question prompt was as follows: "In the 2016 Republican/Democratic primary election for president, which of the following candidates did you vote for?" Among respondents who had already voted, if they refused to provide their vote choice, they were asked again with the following prompt: "We would like to include your response to this question, which will be kept absolutely confidential, with the responses of several hundred other Texans like you" and asked again for whom they had voted.
